HIGHER ED—The New York Building Congress has released an analysis showing that a spike in public school renovations and four ground-up construction projects helped the total value of construction starts reach $3 billion for educational institutions in 2015. The report, based on Dodge Data & Analytics, showed an 83 percent increase from the year before, when the total value of such projects was $1.6 billion. The report took into account public and private elementary and secondary schools, colleges and universities throughout the city. Read the report here: <http://bit.ly/1QGx1xH>
